Lord Eames: Warning on dealing with past

Lord Eames has warned politicians that unless they deal with the past,

Lord Eames said politicians must listen to the next generation problems over parades and flags will never be resolved.

BBC - He was speaking in Belfast at a cross-community youth event, held to discuss the aftermath of the Haass talks.

Lord Eames called on politicians to listen to the next generation who wanted the past resolved in order to forge a better future.

He said the controversial issues were based on recollections of the past.

"My view, quite honestly is that until you have solved how we deal with the past, the issues like parades and flags are not going to go away because both those issues are based on our recollection of the past," the former Church of Ireland primate said.

Five years ago, Lord Eames was involved in a failed attempt to deal with the past, when a report he compiled with Denis Bradley failed to win widespread support.

The recent talks chaired by former American diplomat Richard Haass also ended in disagreement.

Asked for his message to politicians, Lord Eames said: "Listen, you're talking in many cases in the past, you're using the language of the past.

"Young people are saying 'for God's sake give us a future, give us something we can build on'."...

Prior to the event "Haas hope" the organisers had stated, "We have a 16 year old peace process but where is the 16 year old voice? This is the question a group of Christian agencies have been asking themselves recently following the failure of the Haass talks to reach an agreement. "This led to #Haass hope, a conference for 250 young people of Protestant and Catholic faith aged 16–25 held in the Riddel Hall at Queen's University Belfast on 23 March 2014.

Jasper Rutherford, from Summer Madness commented, 'The young people of today are the leaders of tomorrow. This was a day of challenge and inspiration, a day when permission was granted to younger generations to think and dream differently about the future of this island'.

The organisations involved all shared a Christian ethos and values and together seek the peace and wellbeing of all in our society. These organisations are Corrymeela, Evangelical Alliance, Irish Churches Peace Project, Summer Madness, Youth Link, Youth Initiatives, Living Youth, YMCA Ireland and the Chaplaincies at QUB.

Dublin Guitar Quartet Album Launch

The Dublin Guitar Quartet perform at Christ Church Cathedral on the 10th of April 2014.

The Dublin Guitar Quartet are delighted to celebrate this milestone with a very special concert at Christ Church Cathedral. This album is a significant achievement for the quartet and is a culmination of years of work in developing and refining their arrangements of Glass' string quartets. They have avoided standard quartet pieces, choosing instead to expand the limited repertoire by adapting works from outside of the guitar repertoire. Glass' String Quartet No. 3, Mishima, was their first such transcription and they have been added and refined the remaining quartets over recent years." Moyross monk cooking up a storm thanks to French family background

The scent of freshly baked, traditional French breads is wafting through Moyross thanks to the skills of a monk who comes from a family of bakers in Normandy.

Irish Examiner - Each week, Fr Charles Reche, who is a member of the Franciscan Renewal order of monks which moved to the Limerick estate in 2007, holds baking sessions with local women. Fr Charles is one of four monks who live in the friary at Delmege Park.

"When I came here over three years ago, I started a cooking club and we have about six regular members who call here once a week. I was brought up in a bakery in Normandy and am the sixth generation of bakers. I love baking traditional French bread, baguettes, and pastries.

"I have shared my recipes with the local women who attend the cooking classes," he said. While he has introduced the French loaf to Moyross, his culinary skills have been enhanced by some Irish and local recipes. "I now make a good Irish stew and I am also able to do the famous Limerick dish of packet and tripe," Fr Charles said.

Fr Charles left Normandy for New York in 2002 to join the Franciscan Friars of Renewal order of monks which works among disadvantaged communities in many parts of the world.

"For our cookery club, we create a very warm environment where we can have a chat while we share recipes and do some cooking. It has gone very well and the local women seem to be very pleased.

"All the monks share the cleaning, laundry, and cooking duties at the friary, but when we have guests, I am usually delegated to the kitchen," he said.

Film-maker to speak at Portadown church forum

Many nations have been appalled to learn of atrocities on school premises in recent years – some of the school names and news pictures are impressed on the memory.

In 2006 a small Amish school in Pennsylvania was devastated by such a violation, leaving five young girls dead and many more families changed for ever. The gun-free tradition of the Amish community probably heightened the impact of the event.

'A Step Too Far?' – A contemplation on Forgiveness is one response to such situations, from award winning Portadown film-maker Paul Moorehead. Paul visited the affected community in the USA, conducting interviews and compiled some of these stories along with others from Northern Ireland.

Paul will visit Portadown Inter-Church Forum on Thursday, March 27, at 7pm, meeting in Seagoe Hotel. Following a screening of the film, Paul will lead discussions on the issues raised, and share more of what he has learned from the people he met in directing the film. The film shows that forgiveness is by no means an "easy option" for those impacted by violence and injustice, but it is often a powerful tool in building a positive future.

The film was recently awarded 'Best Documentary Feature' at the prestigious Peace on Earth Film Festival in Chicago.

Everyone is invited to come along to view this important film – especially timely in the aftermath of the Haass talks.

The forum gratefully acknowledges the support of the Good Relations Department at Craigavon Borough Council in organising this event.
